RI Clam Chowder

One of the very best benefits of living in Rhode Island is the food, of course! Sure the beaches are beautiful and all, but most would agree the local cuisine is simply out of this world! Here are some oh so very Rhode Island dishes that you should definitely try and where you can find them!

Clam Cakes or Fritters

In the Ocean State, we love our clam cakes. Some prefer them crispy, some like them softer, others like big chunks of clam inside, and some like small bits mixed in with the dough. However you like them best, you're bound to have a favorite go-to spot for this iconic dish. But you just might want to take a trip and sample these culinary treasures from places all over!

Stuffies

If you are from outside of New England, you may not be familiar with one of Rhode Island's most iconic dishes: the stuffed quahog. Known locally as a stuffie, this delectable mixture of clams, breadcrumbs, onion, celery, cherry peppers, butter, and spices is baked in a clam shell, topped with lemon juice and/or tabasco, and consumed as an appetizer or anytime treat. They are such a Rhode Island treasure that there are multiple festivals across the state celebrating this very dish.

Coffee Milk and Coffee Cabinet

If you were born and raised in Rhode Island, the word "cabinet" likely conjures up a different image than it does for most. To the majority of Americans, a cabinet is a place to store things. To a Rhode Islander, it's a delicious ice cream based espresso drink that's absolutely addictive. And there's no better place to get one than Delekta's in Warren.

Del's Lemonade

Nothing says summer on Rhode Island like Del's frozen lemonade. It comes in flavors like orange, watermelon and blueberry, but true Del's enthusiasts know that it's all about the classic lemon. Frosty, sweet and tangy, it strikes the perfect balance between slushy and Italian ice – no straw or spoon required.
